Meanwhile, there's only so many roads you can build before you start building roads to nowhere. And there are only so many apartments you can build before everyone has a decently sized place to live in; after that, you're just building speculative investment properties that are going to decay as they go unused. Even if you don't think that malinvestment should be subtracted from GDP, as

Pat Kennedy and I had formed our partnership to capitalize on the energy crisis by building an integrated oil company. The Federal government, in order to encourage oil exploration by every moron with a drill bit, was granting special dispensations for small refineries producing under 50,000 barrels a day. We used the money we made in refining to help build our energy conglomerate.
